Roman Imperial Sestertii

The Friedrich collection of over fourteen hundred sestertii of the Roman imperial period has been formed according to a system of collecting employed, we believe, only twice in this century, by Ingegnere G. Mazzini, for imperial coins in all metals as a basis for a possible corpus, and by Bob Arnold Esq., for imperial silver denarii from Augustus to the Severans, that is, following Cohen. The necessary result must be, in the absence of the sort of income of which a small autonomous state might reasonably be proud, a certain modesty in respect of conservation, so that the near-total completeness of the series is compensated for by a quality of material which approaches closer to very fine than to the superb which has been the expensive fashion of our day. That is not to say that there are no gems to be found among the honest bronze; rather it is to state that this is an unashamedly old-fashioned collection assembled to please and instruct rather than to dazzle, having more in itself of the Grand Tour than the grand manner. In the time of Henri Cohen, to whom this collection can be seen as a sort of tribute, photography was immensely popular, and what are Roman coins but the illustrated newspapers, admittedly of a propagandistic nature, of a loquacious society deprived of advanced technology. An enormous album of sestertii, then, lies open before you; you have only to take out and enjoy what you like, not forgetting a kind thought of thanks to the diligent amateur whose untiring efforts have made it possible.
